The Relational Pathway to Increased Profits

- Your employees failing relationships cost you money every day: Research shows that over $6 billion is lost by American businesses yearly due to decreased productivity stemming from marriage and relationship difficulties.
- An unprofitable work environment results from the many factors experienced by employees in failing relationships: increased absenteeism and presentism, illness, anxiety, stress and health insurance costs. Most companies do not consider these statistics but modern innovative companies are implementing programs to provide employees with relationship support.
- For an employee earning $40,000/year, the projected cost of that employee divorcing is $8,000 and can disrupt productivity for 3 years. These numbers can increase by 10 times if the employee is in a supervisory role.
- Failing relationships can lead to workplace affairs and 25% of these relationships lead to decreased productivity.
- The increased levels of stress, anxiety, and depression resulting from failing relationships lead to lower levels of physical health and increased risk for substance abuse. These health issues cost companies in higher insurance premiums and healthcare expenditures.

Transform your company's culture into a positive, healthy environment by providing this perk. How can Cory Honickman help?

First, an assessment is completed to provide an accurate dashboard of how your workforce is currently functioning so that programs can be tailored, projects can be tracked and the effectiveness of the programs can be improved. Next, Cory will:

- Provide marriage and relationship education to improve overall wellness
- Assist in your company becoming a FRE, Family-Responsible Employer
- Offer relational coaching as a component of employee assistance services
- Lead Lunch and Learns, marriage relationship libraries or workshops for employees offered throughout the year
- Deliver a continuum of professional services for intervention as an employee benefit
